g private rights was brought to rt in the case of McLau furroughs, presscuting attorney of Wayne county. It seems that a Detroit idermae prevented several citizens rom exercising the right of suffrage, uring the city elections held last Noumber. This interference with the vember. This interference with the free exercise of the right of citizenship came to the notice of other citizens who began legal proceedings by a petition to the governor praying for an investigation. The endorsement of the proceeding attorney being necessary, the petition was laid before him and he was asked to sign it, this he refused to do and returned the petition with a written opinion stating his reasons for refusing. The supreme court was then asked for a writ of mandamus compelling the prosecuting attorney to add his endorsement. The court refused the writ and held that an officer having discretionary power, who had re-ceived papers submitted to him and passed an opinion upon them, had acted within the meaning of the statute and could not be compelled to do more. In a word had the prosecuting attorney returned the petition without an accompanying opinion, then he might be compelled to review the petition, but once having reviewed papers requiring his endorsement and returned them with an opinion, placed him beyond the pale of an action in mandamus. By legal technicalities investigation of a shameful wrong is balked and the prosecuting attorney, though his reasons were buried fathoms deep under legal verbiage, lays himself liable to the charge of hindering justice. The crowning right of American cutisenship should be held so sacred that any attempt to thwart its exercise would bring not only lasting odium up-on the guilty but a speedy punishment, and he who by legel verbiage hinders and be who by legel verbiage hinders or obstructs an investigation becomes equally guilty with the culprit. Even if a different method of procedure exists, it can not be pleaded in excuse, nor can the action of the prosecuting be made to appear less culpable.

There may have been no connivance between the alderman and the pro cuting attorney in this case, but the of serving the other. The case is a omewhat peculiar one and the supreme court in passing upon it, from a purely legal standpoint, as in duty bound, have revealed a flaw in the laws and set a precedent dangerous to the peaceful enjoyment of the right of

COASTING.

Despite the almost daily accounts of fatalities, the direct result of indulgence in this ever popular but danger-ous sport, no boy or girl in the en-joyment of that greatest blesing, joyment of that great its fascinations, health, is able to resist its fascinations, or heed the warnings of their less for-nate fellows. Inded, the very element of danger which surrounds it lends an added charm and seems to lure them their fellows in deeds of daring, bravgashed head or a broken limb or some more painful accident sharply checks

Consting, toboggaining and ski run-ning are all practically the same.

Consting is more distinctively the American method, toboggaining the navian. In each the charm is the same, and from the start, made by giving a slight impetus to the vehicle, which moves off slowly at first, but with ever increasing speed, until it sweeps on down the sharp dectine rapid as a bird in flight, to the "bump," which is taken with glistening eyes and bated breath, then across the level at e foot of the hill with gradually dim-ishing speed, every moment a mo-out of pleasure so keen and exhilirat-g that none who have tried it can recinations or condemn its vota-wers-Prince and the Pauper.

AMUSEMENTS.

Powers—Prince and the Pauper.

Mark Twain's imaginary story, beautiful in its legendary color, "The Prince and the Pauper," attracted a fine audience last evening. Notable among the attendance was the children, all of whom eagerly watched Leslie, who is probably the peer of child actresses, though she will soon be a big girl. Her acting has all of the case, self-confidence and uproar of a natural and long-tried star. There is an innocence, a childish simplicity and a naturalness about this precocious little lass that has all of the power and fascination of what is termed magnetism. Elsie Leslie, so much a true artist now, has all that is bright in the future. Of the play The Herald spoke at length last season. The company does excellent service. In fact they concurred in what was considered and appreciated as one of the most satisfying productions of the season.

General Me

General Mention.

General Manager C. H. Garwood has been for several days very low, at his home in Detroit with the grip. For a time his recovery was in doubt. With his usual pluck, he reached the gaining point, and word was received yesterday that he had so far advanced as to be able to attend to business again.

"Alabama," which will be produced at Powers' this evening, with a time that he had so far advanced as to be able to attend to business again.

"Alabama," which will be produced at Powers' this evening, with a fine cast, headed by the eminent actor F. C. Bangs, is a play that has touched the hearts of the people wherever it has been presented. Prepare then to shed tears, and if the heart be cold it will be warmed by the sun of the South, which shines through this play. A Southern critic spoke of it as follows: "It is tender and true. Tender in depicting the old, old story of love, true in catching nature's own beings, in throwing aside the puppets of the stage and placing in their stead characters that have, and even now do live and love. But the beauty of the simplicity, the grace of that odd gallantry, and the loveliness of the quiet sweetness and dignity that were wont to characterize the maidens, men and matrons of the South are now fading into memories that make golden the shores of the past that gladden yet sadden the fibers of the heart. Yet in their train they bring those fond recollections that cause the very being of man to thrill and pulsate with all the better and nobler emotions of the soul. These memories and recollections are recalled in vivid and strikingly true colors by Augustus Thomas in "Alabama." He has breathed the spirit of truth into each one of his characters, and because of this, even though these characters are in themselves very simple people, the play is refreshing to the nature of man surfeited with the false as are the oping rains to the spring flowers draping with the withering droug ht."

Strange and unaccountable is the ficalences of the amusement going public. For instance the play running at Redmond's this week is of a character that has always proved exceedingly popular with the people who pateonize this theater. Yet business was far from being it should have been. The two last presentations of "777" will be given today.

Everywhere about town attention is called in some manner to the coming of Peter Pateon at Pateonom's towner.

A. Aiger. I had the honor of commanding a regiment in the same brigade with him, and know that he served loyally, faithfully and courageously and with marked distinction and high honor throughout some of the severest campaigns that ever tested the valor of man. I regard the cowardly assult of a brutal assassin as trifling compared with the dastardly attack of the editor of the Sun upon a true soldierly character forged in the hot fire of axty-six battles and stirmishes, and polished by a well-ordered life or twenty-seven years since the war; the distinguished and repeated successes of which have attested those true soldierly qualities which gave him proud distinction as a military commander. Every old soldier of the Michigan cavalry brigade, all comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, and every citisen of the state of Michigan will resent this insult, and hold in scorn and contempt a man so bereft of patriotism and the common decency of manhood as to be the author of such associated the war department and the sworn statement of Dr. Wooster, who was acting brigade surgeon and sent of the foul slander; and the author of it and not its intended victim will suffer the lose of public esteem.

He Was Impressed.

He Was Impressed. As the writer observed the multitudes who thronged the sidewalks of Monroe treet Thursday night, hurrying hither and thither. The melodious notes of a brass band suddenly pealed forth soul-thrilling chords and attracted the attention of the people to a large torch tention of the people to a large torch light procession in which banners were waving—banners on which was announced—what? That such and such an opera company had "struck" town? Ab, no. The mocks of the scorners plainly explained that this band was on no such mission. What, then? Here are words which were sung in accompanyment with the music:

"Though the fight he fierce and long We will battle for the right.
Till Satan's cruel powers coase to reign."

There were many beautiful words, but thuse few suffice to explain the object of this band of men and women in "going out in the highways and hedges."

"going out in the highways and hedges."

The writer, on this particular occasion, was induced by the special announcements of "Temperance meeting" to accept the invitation and occupy a seat in the well-fittled hall. The meeting was opened with a temperance song, "Down with Intemperance," composed by Adjutant George Egner especially for the occasion. J. C. More then led in a praye which, if answered, will effect a happy change in many now sorrowful hearts and dark homes—a prayer which was smphatically indorsed by many, judging from the hearty "Amens!" which frequently made the hall ring as it were. Following the prayer was a song by Cadet Lancaster entitled "Pity the Drunkard, but Dou't Condemn, I pray." He accompanied himself on a guitar, which tended to draw the tears to many an eye.

Lawyer Walker opened the attack upon intemperance with a short but well-delivered speech.

Mrs. Huff entertained the audience with a charming song, which added much impression to the meeting.

much impression to the meeting.

Judge Tateum next took the floor. His address received breathless attention, leaving an impression upon every mind. The truths he uttered were not without weight, whether we all agree with him or not. Next on the program was a recitation by Miss Flora Hall, entitled "Poor Little Blossom," the sum and substance of which was an account of the murder of a child. A third gentlemen then took the floor, whose name is Fellows, if the writer remembers right. His knowledge of the liquor evil was not obtained through the instrumentality of literature. Ho confessed to have been taught by experience; therefore his words were as coals of fire, and held the sudience spellbound.

Adjutant Geo. Egner closed the meeting, after a few remarks upon the subject of intemperance, and the crowd departed, many feeling stung with the pange of conscience; and many, like the writer, thinking of the Salvation Army as a people having a peculiar, though not a bad influence, over a community where they are understood.
